Foreword

It has always been the policy of Weider Publications, through our magazines "Muscle Power" and "Muscle Builder", to make available to our readers every bit of useful information, discussion, and instruction which would enable them to enjoy a fuller and richer life through the possession of a strongly-built and perfectly-maintained body.

Yet if we regarded the achievement of a high degree of muscularity as a final end in itself, we would have shirked our duty to our readers and you, our friends, would be poorer through our lack of initiative.

It is to this end of complete personal development that Probably no event in motion picture history has been so eagerly awaited by readers of this magazine as MGM's new technicolor musical, "ATHENA", starring that Adonis of bodybuilders, Steve Reeves, together with the 1954 Mr. America, Richard DuBois, and practically the entire contingent of Muscle Beach, California.

The distaff side of the picture is held down by Jane Powell, and Debbie Reynolds. Seen also are Edmund Purdom, and Vic Damone.

The case of the mangled muscles

by Allan Paivio

Handsome, witty, athletic Jerry Hayes was the glamor boy of our town. Grandmothers adored him . . . fond mothers dreamed of him as a son-in-law, and girls . . . well, at every dance Jerry left a pile of broken hearts behind him like clam shells after a beach party. That is, until Gloria Atkins lowered the boom on Jerry.

Blonde, dazzling Gloria had come to visit us, and Jerry, catching one glimpse of this form divine promptly turned in his scout badge and called it a day. "Boi-n-n-g-g!" marvelled Jerry as he bit the dust . . . "What a doll!" But for all his vaunted charm it took him three weeks to wangle a date with Gloria.

She was a bit apprehensive about Jerry. Recalling the countless legends of his wit, charm, and derring-do she feared she might run a poor second in their initial encounter. However, had she reckoned with Joe, the corner barber she could have set her fears at rest.

About two hours before date-time Jerry floats down from Cloud #8 and lands at Joe's emporium. Sauntering through the door he sings out . . . "Joe! . . . this is the greatest, but the greatest day of my life . . . make me gorgeous, make me beautiful . . . GIVE ME THE WORKS!" And Joe, like any red-blooded barber, rallies to this battle cry like a Georgian to a rebel yell.

CLEANING TEETH

Q. Is there any dentifrice which will clean more deeply than ordinary toothpastes. I can't seem to get my teeth as sparkling as I would like?

A. Steve Reeves is noted for his gleaming white teeth. He attributes their healthy condition to brushing with a mixture of salt and baking soda. You might also purchase a box of powdered pumice from your druggist. Dipping your wet toothbrush into the powdered stone, brush vigorously up and down and then cross-wise. Use this very infrequently . . . not more than once every two months. Pumice is very abrasive and prolonged use will destroy precious tooth enamel.

HOME DEVELOPMENT WITHOUT WEIGHTS

I have no weights in my home, however, I do have access to chinning and dipping bars. Is it possible to get a good development from these?

A. You're rich, man! All gymnasts have beautifully developed upper bodies from daily practice on this apparatus. Try doing 5 sets of 15 repetitions of the following exercises:

Wide grip chin behind neck.

Narrow grip chin in front of neck.

Dips between bars — body leaning forward.

Dips between bars — body perpendicular.

Shampooing and Dressing the Hair

by Joseph E. Weider

It is quite possible that you may have the physique of Apollo and the face of Adonis, yet the charm and glamour of these two excelling gifts can be entirely dissipated if your hair has been neglected, uncultivated, or if it is carelessly arranged on your head.

Various authorities differ on the frequency of washing the hair. Some say it should be done once a week, others recommend shampooing as much as three times weekly. In my opinion it depends on the individual and just how dirty his hair becomes. The dirtier it gets, of course, the more frequent should be the washing.

I am unalterably opposed to the oil shampoo. The purpose of the shampoo is to cleanse the hair. How can this be done if the already oily hair is again coated with an application of yet another kind of oil?

This is why I have developed the Weider Shampoo. Its rich, creamy, emulsive lather washes every drop of rancid oil, every particle of dirt and dandruff completely out of the hair. Then after a thorough rinsing, the hair is ready to be dried and set.

Let me caution you on the over-use of an electric dryer. These dryers cause the hair to split, and protracted use of them may be a contributing factor toward falling hair. Towel as much water from the hair as you can,

How to choose your own personal cologne

by Hal Warner

Ten years ago, any man who so defied male tradition by appearing in polite society wearing any scent other than Lifebuoy or good ol' bay rum, would have been stripped of his rank and drummed out of the corps.

Today, specialists who create colognes especially for men are as common as cabbages and just about as imaginative. Except for a few progressive and enlightened chemists, most parfumeurs with one hand on the cash register, and the other with a death-grip on conservatism still pussy-foot around the issue. From their laboratories flows a never-ending stream of variegated scent. Without considering the fact that cologne should be an illusory thing designed to accentuate a man's personality and to complement his good grooming, most of these odors are seemingly created to camouflage man into an old saddlebag, a pine tree, a cinnamon bun, or a haystack. Apparently man is supposed to smell like anything except man.

There is simply no pine scent which can transport me to the Forest of Arden . . . and while I bow to no one in my liking for cinnamon buns, I infinitely prefer to eat them than to wear them. As to the smell of new-mown hay I am quite dispassionate, preferring to leave it in the barnyard for our four-footed friends.

Cologne is the only male cosmetic which is not purely functional. Soap, shaving cream, astringents, and deodorants each serves a single direct purpose. Cologne, however, is more abstract. Used wisely it should create an illusion . . . give the perfect finishing touch to one's good grooming . . . it should be the summation of everything that is YOU.

It is not difficult to choose the scent which is best for you if you approach the task with caution. Remember this, cologne does not smell the same on the skin as it does in the bottle. Hence do not visit the cosmetics

You will find that every muscle in the upper body has been heavily brought into play.

DRY SKIN

Q. My skin is daily becoming more dry and scaly though I take a hot soap bath three times a day. Could you recommend some treatment for this condition?

A. In your case cleanliness is not next to godliness . . . it's next to insanity. How can you possibly need three baths a day? You are taking so many of them that the body hasn't time to secrete its natural oil. Try taking one tub bath per day and one shower. Into your tub put a teaspoon of some good bath oil containing cholesterol. When you leave the tub you will have a very faint film of oil over your entire body. Continue this method for several days and your skin will return to normal.

BODY HAIR

Q. Why is it that in photographs of bodybuilders they appear to have no body hair? Do they shave or dispose of the hair in some way?

A. Many bodybuilders do shave their bodies. However, an increasingly large number of them use commercial depilatories for this purpose. Hair once shaved grows back quicker and thicker. Depilatorized hair returns much more slowly and is usually of the same texture. Some people are then brush a bit of Weider Formula #7 through it. If you will now comb and set it, your hair is neatly and permanently arranged on your head.

Never use any product on the hair which contains alcohol. Nothing so dries and splits the hair as the continued use of alcoholic lotions. You would also be well-advised to check up on your present diet. Are you getting enough protein? Remember, the health and beauty of your hair depend as much on your diet as from the external treatment you give it. Be sure that the vitamin B family is well-represented. These are truly the "hair vitamins". Not only do they control hair growth to a large extent, but the lack of these vitamins is a contributory cause to early baldness.

You should spend at least fifteen minutes a day just tugging and brushing the hair. Use a very stiff brush several hundred times before retiring. All these little aids pay off big dividends in hair health and beauty. Keep your hair awake . . . keep it alive . . . remember, it's supposed to be your crowning glory!

It is also necessary that the diet be rich in protein from the best available sources and that the vitamin and mineral balance be kept high through the ingestion of two vitamin-mineral tablets daily. In addition to this, the diet should be buttressed with high-protein concentrates. Only in this way can you be assured of an adequate protein intake.

More important, the skin of the scarred area will match that of the unscarred skin. Consult your family physician who will recommend a specialist in this branch of the medical profession.

Rather, ask the salesperson to spray a bit of two colognes, one on each wrist. Before sniffing the results, first allow the scent to mingle with the warmth of the skin for a few moments, then smell. If you find one that pleases you, fine! If not, wash the hands thoroughly and repeat the process with two others until you find the scent that completely satisfies you.

You will be well-advised to NEVER use heavy spice cologne . . . no cinnamon buns for you. Also be wary of certain floral odeurs such as lotus, gardenia, jasmine, or narcissus . . . these are too distinctive and too feminine for male use. Carnation, while obviously floral in name is actually a spice perfume.

When using cologne, be sure that your bath soap is not heavily scented. They C-L-A-S-H!! To scrub yourself with carnation soap and then to apply lilac cologne is to invite a state of nausea in those who come in contact with you. Here are some helpful suggestions to aid you in selecting the cologne best suited to you.

1. At the outset remember that cheap scent is never worth owning . . . buy the best your pocketbook affords or use none at all.
2. Assess your personality type before you consider buying any cologne.
3. Don't choose pungent or "loud" scents . . . your cologne should never herald your arrival, it should always suggest . . . never declaim.
4. If you are a gay laughing, light-hearted youth, choose a very light and serious disposition, more on the calm and aloof and reserved side, select something which is not so brilliant in tone, perhaps a simple floral odeur, or something with a trifle of the mystic in it.

6. However, if you are the bold, forceful, aggressive business tycoon, a more dynamic scent is indicated... one of the good synthesized colognes... even a bit on the exotic side.

7. In summation, your cologne should express perfect harmony with your personality and physical make-up... always subtle, always enhancing... never at variance.

8. If your profession or employment necessitates your mingling with many other people, use your cologne sparingly or not at all. You will cease to enjoy it if it has to fight a constant battle with a dozen or more other scents.

9. Sometimes the terms "cologne" and "eau de toilette" (toilet water) are used interchangeably. Actually cologne is a somewhat weaker distillation of the perfume, and as such is more practical for men since it does not linger too long. Scent should never linger more than a few hours.

10. Never put cologne on clothing. Always on the skin, under the arms and on the chest. If cologne is absorbed into the clothing it lingers until it becomes stale. Also, some colognes discolor clothing.

Above all, when squiring your best girl to the Senior Prom be sure your cologne is subdued and discreet. If she is wearing her best Christian Dior gown and comes floating your way on a gossamer cloud of Patou's "Joy", while you are doused in a sea of "Old Fruit

JOSEPH E. WEIDER

After the usual haircut and shampoo Joe begins the ritual of the hot, hotter, and still hotter towels. Poor Jerry's facial muscles under this ordeal by fire crumple like a cheese souffle. This, however, is not all. Discovering that there is still a trace of life in his victim, Joe now administers his special tonsorial coup-de-grace. With his ham-like hands whirling like a mix-master Joe pulls and tears the muscles of Jerry's face in every conceivable direction. He snaps and stretches and rends and tears every tissue until our hero's face looks like a bowl of stewed rhubarb. And where is our charm boy during the fray? Why, fast asleep in the chair.

Joe, having "given him the works" awakens Jerry who forks over five bucks and staggers sleepily on his way, little realizing that his date with Gloria is already a shambles.

Gloria had been looking forward to an evening of fun and bright conversation with the most eligible man in town. Instead she got the booby prize, for Jerry, so sleepy from the maniacal manipulations of Joe, couldn't have matched wits with a half-wit, and for his fabulous charm . . . where was it? Why, it was cuddled up all cozy and nice in Joe's barber chair, locked up safely for the night.

The moral of this story is that facial massage is too often performed by incompetent masseurs like Joe. There is much to be said for massage if it is correctly done. In cases of facial paralysis it is the only exercise available, static though it is.

The best massage is obtained through electric vibration. This technique makes it possible for the masseur to use varying degrees of pressure on the patient and allows him to reach the very seat of congestion no matter how deep.

Facial massage should always utilize this vibro-tapping motion. Facial muscles should never be stretched because prolonged pulling or kneading causes the muscles to become unhinged. Use a vibrator or have your massage done by an expert. To do otherwise can be disastrous.
